According to the letter from Jack David of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York (opposite), [redacted] talked to you [redacted] about the upcoming Random House book based on the July 1987 program on "Crime and Punishment Under the Constitution" sponsored by the Association. You had been scheduled to speak at the program but bad weather grounded you in Washington. The group would be interested in having a relevant speech you delivered on some other occasion for inclusion in the book. Mr. David included a copy of the proceedings of the program to aid in your selection of a speech. Based on a review of those proceedings we recommend that you submit the Tyrrell Williams Memorial lecture on "Sophisticated Surveillance -- Intolerable Intrusion or Prudent Protection" which you gave at Washington University School of Law in St. Louis on March 14, 1985. [redacted] agree that this speech would be appropriate for inclusion in the Random House book without any changes.

In order to meet the publisher's deadline, Mr. David must have your contribution in hand by 26 October. If you agree, please sign the attached letter.

Dear Mr. David:

STAT

[redacted] and I did discuss my possible contribution to the Association's Random House book. As you may recall, I was terribly disappointed to miss that evening with the New York Bar, and am delighted to be able to help in this way.

I am sending you a copy of a speech that I gave on March 14, 1985, while I was still serving as Director of the FBI. This may be most appropriate for the study of crime and punishment, and reflects my views on how law enforcement can and must be conducted as set out by the Constitution and governed by the rule of law.

I am, of course, still keenly interested in the subject and look forward to the publication of this book.

Sincerely yours,

William H. Webster
Director of Central Intelligence
